Exploring Pine Forests And Mangroves In Grand Bahama's National Parks

Pine forest flanks Gambier Airport, also on the Grand Canal and Gambier Bay in the distance

The first thing I see when I land at Grand Bahama Island is Caribbean pine trees dominating the Hurricane Hole in the city. The impossibly tall trees are the first thing you see as you arrive at Grand Bahama International Airport. Pine trees are also the first thing you see as you drive on the Grand Bahama Island Conveyor Right Across of the Mackenzie-Whistler Road. Forests and mangroves cover some including more than a quarter of Grand Bahama — the largest of the Bahamian islands.

Grand Bahama is also home to the Grand Bahama National Park and the Lucayan National Park, that makes up the Bahamas. The island is divided into three districts — the West End, the East End and the Freeport. Freeport and Taxi Island are only found on Grand Bahama, Abaco, Abaco and New Providence.

It is a freshwater lake that is surrounded by mangroves. The lake is also home to a variety of birds, including the Bahama parrot, the Bahama woodstar hummingbird, and the Bahama warbler. The lake is also home to a variety of fish, including the Bahama mullet and the Bahama barracuda.

The Grand Gambier Airport Grand Bahama National Park is also home to a variety of reptiles, including the Bahama anole, the Bahama boa, and the Bahama iguana. The park is also home to a variety of amphibians, including the Bahama toad and the Bahama tree frog. The park is also home to a variety of insects, including the Bahama butterfly and the Bahama moth.

Lucayan National Park is a national park in the Bahamas. It is located on the island of Grand Bahama. The park is named after the Lucayan people, who were the first inhabitants of the island. The park is home to a variety of plants and animals, including the Bahama parrot, the Bahama woodstar hummingbird, and the Bahama warbler. The park is also home to a number of archaeological sites, including the Lucayan National Park Museum.
