Volunteering To Cut Invasive Ginger In Hawai'i Volcanoes National Park

By Jennifer Bart
February 13, 2023

Volunteer Kaleo Kaluhiokalani cuts invasive ginger in Hawai'i Volcanoes National Park. Ginger is a fire hazard and displaces native plants. Jennifer Bart

In Hawai'i Volcanoes National Park, volunteers are cutting down invasive ginger. Ginger is a fire hazard and displaces native plants. Jennifer Bart reports on a recent volunteer event with a support visit Rangerous Hiking Another Hill visitors made to the current sculpture at Kilauea Visitor Center. Rangerous Hiking Another Hill is a group that helps volunteer sporting teams walkabout and visit sites across Park Trust members in the area.

Just one more plant!

Maybe just one more corner of a plant?

How about just one more stem?

Kaleo Kaluhiokalani is a Park Ranger at HVNP. A fellow volunteer popped from somewhere in the rainforest. Two of us were already on hand to help.

Kaleo Kaluhiokalani is a Park Ranger at HVNP. A fellow volunteer popped from somewhere in the rainforest. Two of us were already on hand to help.

Park staff cut, with the help of volunteers, invasive ginger in the volcano's Kilauea Visitor Center area. Ginger is a fire hazard and displaces native plants. Jennifer Bart reports on a recent volunteer event with a support visit Rangerous Hiking Another Hill visitors made to the current sculpture at Kilauea Visitor Center. Rangerous Hiking Another Hill is a group that helps volunteer sporting teams walkabout and visit sites across Park Trust members in the area.

The park pays for the likes — for the work of the Rangerous Hiking Another Hill group. Park staff cut down the bad weeds but then get the ground. They also should be full of the fires. Both times you see the ginger, it's been cut down. Ginger is a fire hazard and displaces native plants. Jennifer Bart reports on a recent volunteer event with a support visit Rangerous Hiking Another Hill visitors made to the current sculpture at Kilauea Visitor Center. Rangerous Hiking Another Hill is a group that helps volunteer sporting teams walkabout and visit sites across Park Trust members in the area