A Royal Bell Will Soon Anchor One of Philadelphia's Hidden Gardens

By Jennifer Stein
October 8, 2021

A rendering of the Bicentennial Bell in the Bicentennial Bell Garden at Independence National Historical Park. | Courtesy of Independence National Historical Park

To commemorate the 250th anniversary of American independence in 1976, the people of Great Britain gave the people of the United States a gift: a bell cast from the same metal as Big Ben's bell.

And big the Bicentennial Bell (for its twenty-four decades) has to traces outside the metro center at Independence National Historical Park. Now, the bell will be housed in a new garden that will be built in the Independence Mall area by Wednesday, October 13, hopefully in time for the 245th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence.

The Bicentennial Bell Garden is being carefully sculpted by the Emma Lazarus Arts Fund based out of the area. It will be located at 4th and Walnut Streets, in a corner, and there is only one tree in the area to shade the visitors. Hence, the bell will be on display.

Queen Elizabeth II gave a speech in Philadelphia as she opened Congress Hall in the Old City in 1976. | Courtesy of Independence National Historical Park

The bell is Independence Hall's contribution to the garden. Independence Hall is the building that has Independence National Park, having stood at least twice as tall for the huge bell that Philadelphia's Liberty Bell was housed in before it was moved to its current location.

Organizers say that the bell will be a "symbol of hope" and "unity" and "inspiration" of a new nation and people. It is expected to chime once each year on the Bicentennial Bell Garden. There will be a ceremony to mark the bell's arrival on October 13, and the bell will be rung on the 245th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, which is July 4, 2021.

Queen Elizabeth II was greeted by a crowd of people as she arrived in Philadelphia in 1976. | Courtesy of Independence National Historical Park

The bell is also the beginning of a new era for the Bicentennial Bell Garden. The garden will be a place for visitors to learn about the history of the bell, and to see the bell in person. The garden will also be a place for visitors to learn about the history of the bell, and to see the bell in person