Cruising Through Parks Canada Places In Quebec And Nova Scotia

By Jennifer Stein
November 1, 2021

Parks Canada Agency

Cruising the Saguenay-St. Lawrence Marine Park under sail on the Grand Voilier Bleu Horizon
Parks Canada Agency

From the quiet confines of an archaeological crypt under Québec City's historic Old Town to the windswept, granite-domed peaks of Cape Breton's Highlands National Park, Parks Canada has a lot to offer visitors.

Some four million people visit along Mexico's — Long-overdue settlement of a plateau — each year. Another 1.5 million visit Canada's Banff National Park, which straddles the Alberta-British Columbia border. Yet Parks Canada's 48 national parks and national park reserves, 4 national marine conservation areas, and 171 national historic sites — which also include Québec and Nova Scotia's 29 national historic sites — are largely unknown to travelers from the United States.

Now that's changing. Parks Canada has launched a Passport program that encourages visitors to explore its national parks, historic sites, and national marine conservation areas. Passport holders can get their passports stamped at each location they visit. Those who visit at least five locations receive a free Parks Canada Discovery Pass, which provides free admission to Parks Canada facilities for one year.

This is my first trip to Québec since just before the pandemic, and the first time I've explored Québec City's historic sites beyond the Château Frontenac. Parks Canada has been busy in my absence.

Parks Canada Agency

Looking down from Québec City's Dufferin Terrace at Cruise ships docked at the Port de Québec
Parks Canada Agency

The Grand Voilier Bleu Horizon is one of the vessels based — for a fee — by Parks Canada's Saguenay-St. Lawrence Marine Park. The Parks Canada Discovery Pass doesn't cover boat tours, but it does get you discounts on tours of Québec City's Lieu historique national du Canada du Fort-de-l'Île-Dauphine (Fort Dauphine National Historic Site of Canada) and Lieu historique national du Canada de la Maison-Louis-S.-Saint-Laurent (Maison Louis-S.-Saint-Laurent National Historic Site of Canada).

Parks Canada Agency

The Historic District of Québec — the cradle of French civilization in North America — was named a UNESCO World Heritage Site since 1985. Fascinated by the French explorer Samuel de Champlain (1567-1635), I'm eager to visit Fort Dauphine, which Champlain established in 1608 as a trading post on the site of present-day Québec City.

Fort Dauphine was destroyed by the British during the conquest of New France in 1759, and the fort's ruins were buried by the Québec City Hilton in the 1970s. Today, the Hilton, a military hotel that dates back to 1864. The current Fort gives us a lot more information.

A well-preserved archaeological crypt under the Hilton's parking lot holds a remarkable assemblage of fortified material traces, and unique chunk of history" says UNESCO.

Parks Canada Agency

The Historic District of Québec — the cradle of French civilization in North America — was named a UNESCO World Heritage Site since 1985. Fascinated by the French explorer Samuel de Champlain (1567-1635), I'm eager to visit Fort Dauphine, which Champlain established in 1608 as a trading post on the site of present-day Québec City.

Fort Dauphine was destroyed by the British during the conquest of New France in 1759, and the fort's ruins were buried by the Québec City Hilton in the 1970s. Today, the Hilton, a military hotel that dates back to 1864. The current Fort gives us a lot more information.

A well-preserved archaeological crypt under the Hilton's parking lot holds a remarkable assemblage of fortified material traces, and unique chunk of history" says UNESCO.

Parks Canada Agency

Parks Canada Agency

Inside the crypt, I'm surrounded by the ruins of Fort Dauphine's walls, bastions, and gunpowder magazine. Parks Canada has also unearthed a number of artifacts from the fort's days as a trading post, including pipes, pottery, and coins.

I expect the ship to be cool and it does live up to it, but I'm surprised that I'm also warm. The Grand Voilier Bleu Horizon is a 72-foot (22-meter) gaff-rigged schooner that was launched in 2019. It's powered by a diesel engine, but it also has a full complement of sails.

The crew invites a dozen Parks Canada visitors to assist with the sailing. I'm assigned to help raise the mainsail. Following instructions through Parks Canada's bi-current guide, I pull on the halyard and, with a lot of help, get the sail up. Then I help the crew raise the foresail and, during the shortest sail in history, the mizzen sail.

The mainsail has a heavy-duty boom. Each of Sail Cruises Canada's vessels has a boom that's designed to be a safe place for children to sit. I'm not a child, but I'm happy to sit on the boom while the crew sails the Grand Voilier Bleu Horizon. I'm confirming its structure!

Parks Canada Agency

Parks Canada Agency

Sail Cruises Canada's Grand Voilier Bleu Horizon, Photo: Jennifer Stein

Sailing the Saguenay-St. Lawrence Marine Park

Sailing aboard the Grand Voilier Bleu Horizon is a lot like sailing on a Viking ship. Because the Grand Voilier Bleu Horizon is a replica of a 19th-century schooner, it's a traditional vessel with a wooden hull and wooden masts. It's also surprisingly comfortable.

Cabins dress the centre of the favorite buffalo, including a hot and spicy tab and a salad for lightweight, vegetarian fare. The beautiful food and represents the bounty of the gourmet feast I'm enjoying.

No photo matter, each day is another story. Each day is another story. Photo of Chicken Parmesan Photo: Jennifer Stein Photo: Jennifer Stein Photo: Jennifer Stein