How Dawson City Is Telling A Deeper Klondike Gold Rush Story

By Jennifer Nalee
October 31, 2022

The traditional Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in welcome ceremony. Parks Canada began working with Indigenous Peoples to tell a more complete story of the Klondike Gold Rush. Parks Canada

There he stands in the woods as you start making down the Discovery Claim Trail to the creek where Dawson Jim Mason, Skookum Jim Mason and Tagish Charlie first Struck Paydirt and George Carmack discovered gold that Yukon in August 1896 and launched the Klondike Gold Rush.

Dawson City, Yukon Territory, Canada. Parks Canada has begun working with Indigenous Peoples to tell a more complete story of the Klondike Gold Rush. Parks Canada

Now Dawson City is telling a deeper story of the Klondike Gold Rush. Parks Canada has begun working with Indigenous Peoples to tell a more complete story of the Klondike Gold Rush. Parks Canada

Parks Canada, with help from the Yukon government, created the silhouette when it started to re-tell the Klondike Gold Rush story from the perspective of the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in First Nation people. Parks Canada

Dawson City, Yukon Territory, Canada. Parks Canada has begun working with Indigenous Peoples to tell a more complete story of the Klondike Gold Rush. Parks Canada

The Yukon Gold Rush launched the Klondike Gold Rush. Parks Canada has begun working with Indigenous Peoples to tell a more complete story of the Klondike Gold Rush. Parks Canada

Parks Canada, with help from the Yukon government, created the silhouette when it started to re-tell the Klondike Gold Rush story from the perspective of the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in First Nation people